The vast majority of the market is managed by algorithms

The vast majority of the market is managed by algorithms.

When algorithms see predetermined critical price points, they automatically issue sell orders. This creates a domino effect, with sales triggering one another. Investors trading with leverage and opening massive positions are utterly ruined / are getting slaughtered.

The price cannot find a level to hold onto and crashes to the bottom. Once it reaches ridiculously low levels, the big fish step in.

When the big fish's algorithms are activated, prices start to rise.

Friends who lack financial literacy, ignore logic, and are deprived of reading books define this as "robbery."
